After college, I abandoned my career track because while it had the technical aspect (financial analyst), it never really had the human aspect. Also, I thought I would lose my mind if I spent the rest of my days commuting to an office. I wanted a job that: I could leverage into location-independence. Solved unique and interesting problems.

I never thought I would have this epiphany. | by Forest ...

I'd say the fist, "I would never have thought...", is more emphatic and it stresses the fact you feel surprised. But maybe the other is more common, even in the same kinds of situations... Just my opinion though. 11th April 2008
